New Programs Initiated to Assist Students to Succeed

- Multicultural Academic and Support Services (MASS) kicked off two new initiatives during the 2007-2008 academic year. To better serve underrepresented students, MASS launched programming for first generation students and multicultural males. Both programs are designed to provide academic support services and workshops to increase the retention and graduation rates for students in these cohorts.

- The first MASS initiative is the First Generation Program. First generation students are those whose parents or guardians have not completed a baccalaureate degree. Currently, more than 7,000 UCF students are first generation comprising 14 percent of UCF's total population. Recognizing the importance of meeting this population's needs, MASS created the program to facilitate the students' academic and social integration and to increase their probability of success throughout college. The First Generation Program offers students peer mentoring, academic workshops and scholarship information. Additionally, first-time-in-college first generation students receive valuable connections and transition services when they attend their orientation session.

- "Many first generation students are excited to share their stories here in an office setting," said Diane Aronowitz, program coordinator. According to first-year nursing student Christene Brown, "The information and advice offered would make any freshman feel confident. The MASS staff sincerely cares about students. The program is a way to have a successful college career because of First Generation support."

- MASS is working with the Office of Student Financial Assistance and serves as a connection point for students they search for financial resources. Aronowitz notes that, “It’s obvious that these students need an office to support and address their educational, personal and social concerns.” And the facts support this need. As of 2007, 36 percent of the 14,000 students in this group are the first generation students who have the odds stacked against them. First generation students:
  - Who are multicultural are underrepresented.
  - Are less likely to enroll and attend college.
  - Will receive less guidance from their parents.

The report continues by stating that the first generation population continues to grow:

- 6.5 million first generation students attend colleges and universities in the U.S.
- 97,000 first generation students live in the southern region.
- There has been a 27 percent increase in the number of first generation students from the southern states attending college over the past four years.

In addition to adding first generation students, MASS is reaching out to another population with its Brother to Brother Program (BTB). Established during Fall 2007, the program is designed to help retain and graduate multicultural and first generation males. The six-year graduation rate among the 2,000 cohort for African-American and Hispanic males was 36.8 percent and 39.1 percent, respectively. Because of the low graduation rate for multicultural males, the MASS office provided the opportunity to develop a program to help increase the retention and graduation rate for this population of students. BTB is a collaborative effort between representatives from MASS, Career Services, Housing and Residence Life, and Office of Diversity Initiatives.

Currently, State Farm is a partner of the BTB and wants to increase its involvement next year in helping to develop the multicultural and first generation males on campus. One of the future initiatives is to secure more external partnerships so that the BTB can expand the number of at-risk students invited into the program.

In addition to these two programs, MASS has developed several workshops including:

- "Graduate School Week," designed to provide students with insight into preparing for admission into graduate school, and "How to Prepare Yourself for the Corporate World," which will provide students with knowledge of tools necessary to acquire while at UCF in order to be competitive later in the corporate world.

For more information, call the MASS office at: 407.823.2716.

The Next Generation: Students

- Calloway, James, engineering electrical student and participant of the College of Medicine.

"This is part of the attempt to expose and develop the leadership skills of these students," BTB members have leadership roles on several student committees, including the Student Finance Board and the Late Knights committee. Additionally, one member is also a staff writer with the Central Florida Future.

Welcome to the Transfer Connection

Transfer Knights, a student organization promoting transfer student involvement at UCF, introduced Spring 2008 transfers to the UCF community with the first-ever Transfer Connection Welcome event. Campus partners offered academic workshops and information sessions; academic colleges and departments provided information on student involvement in their majors; and student organizations promoted their clubs and events, sharing information about resources and how to become involved on campus.

Breakout sessions offered topics of interest to transfers: off-campus services, professional networking, study skills, and research opportunities. The event culminated with “Are You Smarter than a Freshman?” games (a take-off from a TV show), based on student information involvement. Transfer students competed against freshmen for prizes.

According to Charlene Sinuard, director of Transfer and Transition Services (TTS), “The Transfer Knights office, TTS Peer Mentors, and Student Government Association (SGA) provided an outstanding example of collaboration to create a new event for transfer students. One of the critical elements of transfer student success, both for retention and graduation, is connecting to the campus community...getting involved. We had great support from SDES: Dr. Elhaz, and Dr. Piresl are strong advocates for transfer students. We hope to make this an even bigger event in the fall.”

Health Services Kicks-off the Spring with Staff Events

UCF Health Services held their Spring Kickoff and Organizational Day on January 3 to celebrate a successful fall semester and to get ready for the spring semester. Special guests included: Maribeth Elsas, vice president for SDES; Deborah German, dean for the UCF Medical School; and Jimmy Moore, coordinator of assessment and OW/Campus Students Services for Housing & Residence Life.

The Organizational Day helped to refresh the Health Services’ staff by treating them to a variety of events. The staff was treated to lunch; given tours of the arboriculture, Knight Aide—the new Health Information Management.

UCF Daytona Campus

On January 10, Daytona Student Services, SWS, Volusia County Alumni Association, and the Daytona Education Department co-hosted a “Welcome Back & Blood Drive.” Approximately 75 students had the opportunity to meet with student organization representatives who encouraged students to get involved on their regional campus. SGA provided free food and drinks, and the UCF Alumni Association gave away a portable cooler. Additionally, 19 units of blood and three units of plasma were donated to Florida’s Blood Center. Another blood drive is scheduled in April.

Students were welcomed to the spring semester at the UCF Coca Campus with a barbecue lunch and had the opportunity to meet the faculty and staff. They were provided information on Student Government Association, Southern Region Student Services and campus spring activities. In addition, Southern Region Student Services showcased scholarship opportunities and sponsored a drawing for UCF books and UCF Creed promotional items. Remembering

Students, faculty and staff honored Martin Luther King, Jr. with a procession that began at Memory Mall. Members of the UCF community joined the group as they marched through the Student Union and the John T. Washington Center singing gospel songs. At the Reflecting Pond, the crowd gathered as Bryan Arnette, senior Health Service administration student, began to recite, “I’ve Been to the Mountaintop,” the last landmark speech MLK delivered in Memphis, Tennessee on April 1, 1968. Arnette is a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc. MLK was also a member of that fraternity. The march has become a tradition at UCF

“The Multicultural Student Center and the Xi Iota chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc. have partnered for three years now, to remember the Dreams of Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.,” said Arnette. “It is our goal to make his Dream become a reality in the UCF and Orlando communities.”

Leadership Week 2008: Take It or Lead It

Every year UCF generates graduates who become leaders in a diverse array of fields. As students, they gained valuable experience with servant leadership and discovered the importance of being engaged on campus.

The 11th Annual Leadership Week, taking place February 18-24, will continue to inspire UCF’s next generation of servant leaders. It is a week-long event featuring guest speakers, workshops, panels and forums, all based around the theme “Take It or Lead It.” Most programs are 50-minutes long and will be held in the Student Union between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. Keynote speakers include: Jeff Corwin (as seen on Animal Planet), Jimmy Moore (Housing and Residence Life), Cott Germain (alumna), and Brandie Hollinger (Student Government Association).”

“In today’s connected society, anyone can have a voice heard and be a leader for social change,” says Allie Schwartz, undergraduate program assistant, LEAD Scholars Program. “These programs will inspire students, faculty and staff to make an impact as servant leaders.” For more information, visit: www.ucfleadershipweek.com.

SDES Recognized: The Discussion Continues

Kerry Welch
Director, Office of Student and Involvement Primary Facilitator, SDES Recognized

SDES Recognized is the process of adjusting the current Student Development and Enrollment Services’ vision, “Building collaborative partnerships that empower students to succeed,” by adding the phrase “by aligning SDES programs and services around student learning outcomes.” Hopefully, this new design will provide opportunities for SDES offices and units to illustrate the student learning that results from our hard work in the delivery of programs and services.

In order to accomplish this, many of the leaders in the division have been involved in discussions about student learning goals and student learning outcomes. This group of SDES staff has been referred to as the SDES Recognition Core Group; however, that name could be a bit misleading in that it is a fluid group with new members continually being added. They have met in various settings on numerous occasions to deliberate this vision. Those discussions led to the selection of fifteen Learning Guides (we list) who have been engaged in additional training and have worked diligently to devise innovative approaches toward furthering this vision. The Learning Guides represent a cross-section of programs and offices in the division. The Learning Guides have been assigned to all of the offices and units across the division to act as consultants, provide technical assistance, and enthusiastically to support the achievement of this vision.

Our group’s development of student learning outcomes will be based on the five learning domains of The UCF Creed: Creativity, Community, Scholarship, Integrity and Excellence. The Learning Guides of the Core Group are currently in the process of developing sub-categories of these five learning domains to make it easier for SDES units to assign learning outcomes to their own student learning outcomes. By defining the learning domains ( Creed) more specifically (i.e., sub-categories), we will be able to more confidently align student learning outcomes across the division. This may, in turn, lead to discovering how SDES programs and services to be more intentional so that students develop in holistic ways. Ultimately, we hope that students will be able to identify how experiences at UCF, especially those that result from their engagement in SDES programs and services, have influenced their development as responsible global citizens.

On January 28, the Core Group met to further discuss the vision for SDES Recognized, continue to learn the terminology associated with learning domains, become more familiar with the learning outcomes and have better understand how the Institutional Effectiveness Plans and SDES Recognized interconnect. The Core Group members also had an opportunity to practice developing student learning outcomes. The immediate future of SDES Recognized calls for reviewing and further editing the sub-categories, additional practice on writing learning outcomes and continuing to develop the vision. New Programs Initiated to Assist Students to Succeed

Multicultural Academic and Support Services (MASS) kicked-off two new initiatives during the 2007-2008 academic year. To better serve underrepresented students, MASS launched programming for first generation students and multicultural males. Both programs are designed to provide academic support services and workshops to increase the retention and graduation rates for students in these cohorts.

The first MASS initiative is the First Generation Program. First generation students are those students whose parents or guardians have not completed a baccalaureate degree. Currently, more that 7,000 UCF students are first generation students representing 9% of UCF’s total population. Recognizing the importance of meeting this population’s needs, MASS created the program to facilitate the students’ academic and social integration and to increase their probability of success throughout college. The First Generation Program offers students peer mentoring, academic success workshops and scholarship information. Additionally, first-time-in-college first generation students receive valuable connections and transition services when they attend their orientation session.

“Many first generation students are excited to know there is an office on campus that understands them,” said Diane Aronowitz, program coordinator. According to first-year nursing student Christine Pincin, “The MASS Program and advice offered would make any freshman feel confident. The MASS staff sincerely cares about students. The information and advice have been very helpful and I have a successful college career because of First Generation support.”

MASS is working with the Office of Student Financial Assistance and serves as a connection point for students as they search for financial resources. Aronowitz notes that, “It’s obvious that these students need an office to support and address their educational, personal and social concerns.” And the facts support this need. According to the 2007 College Report, first generation students have the odds stacked against them. First generation students:

• Who are multicultural are underrepresented.
• Are less likely to enroll and attend college
• Will receive less guidance from their parents.

The report continues by stating that the first generation population continues to grow:

• 6.5 million first generation students attend colleges and universities in the U.S.
• 97,000 first generation students are from the southern region
• There has been a 27 percent increase in the number of first generation students from the southern states attending college over the past four years.

In addition to adding first generation students, MASS is reaching out to another population with its Brother to Brother Program (BTB). Established during Fall 2007, the program is designed to help retain and graduate multicultural and first generation males. The six-year graduation rate among the 2,000 cohort for African-American males was 38.6 percent and 39.1 percent, respectively. Because of the low graduation rate for multicultural males, the MASS office provided the opportunity to develop a program to help increase the retention and graduation rate for this population of students. BTB is a collaborative effort with representation from MASS, Career Services, Housing and Residence Life and Office of Diversity Initiatives.

The program’s unique aspect is that it is 100% male. The program is designed to develop the leadership skills of these students.

“We are interested in applying for the BTB Program because we want to increase the retention and graduation rate for this population of African-American males,” said Dennis McFarland, director for MASS. “This program is an excellent way to help students succeed.”

The program is open to African-American men who are expected to graduate in Fall 2008 and are admitted into the program. The program’s primary focus is on academic achievement, leadership development and mentoring. In addition, the program will provide book scholarships for students who successfully complete the program. Another BTB goal is to enhance the leadership skills of program participants and help increase their awareness of leadership opportunities on campus. Wayne Jackson, director for MASS, states he is pleased with the success of the program thus far. The program’s average cumulative grade point average for the students was a 3.2, with a retention rate of 102 percent from Fall ‘07 to Spring ’08.

Recently, Jackson took a group of male students to the National Black Student Leadership Development Conference in Washington, D.C. According to Jackson, “This is part of the attempt to expose and develop the leadership skills of these students.” BTB members have leadership roles on several student committees, including the Student Finance Board and the Late Knights committee. Additionally, one member is also a staff writer with the Central Florida Future.

Currently, State Farm is a partner of the BTB and wants to increase its involvement next year in helping to develop and train the multicultural and first generation male on campus.

One of the future initiatives is to secure more external partnerships so that the BTB can expand the number of at-risk students invited into the program.

In addition to these two programs, MASS has developed several workshops including: “Graduate School Week,” designed to provide students with insight into preparing for admission into graduate school, and “How to Prepare Yourself for the Corporate World,” which will provide students with knowledge of tools necessary to acquire while at UCF in order to be competitive later in the corporate world.

For more information, call the MASS office at 407.823.2716.

If you know of students who might be interested in applying for the BTB Program for the ’08-09 academic year, call Wayne Jackson at 407.823.2716 or e-mail wjackson@mail.ucf.edu.
